In short, the view is that the reconciliation process has tipped too far in favour of the rights of the state and non-Maori. While the foreshore may be the last frontier in terms of terra firma in this country, there are many challenging issues ahead of us. Get this from a library! Māori property rights and the foreshore and seabed : the last frontier. [Claire Charters; Andrew Erueti;] -- "In this era of indigenous peoples' rights recognition, states around the globe are faced with reconciling the pre-existing, inherent rights of indigenous peoples with those held and asserted by the ... In Māori Property Rights and the Foreshore and Seabed: The Last Frontier Charters and Erueti bring together a collection of essays that explore the legal issues raised by Ngāti Apa and Foreshore and Seabed Act 2004. Topics covered include the historical origins of Ngāti Apa, how the Foreshore and Seabed Act compares with schemes created in other countries with Indigenous peoples, and how the Act stacks up against international human rights law and environmental law.
